Bryan and his 83-year-old father spent the last decade building an incredible LEGO Star Wars collection together. Their shared passion resulted in about 780 sets and more than 1,200 minifigures, with the hope that one day, selling the collection could help pay for their grandchildren's college. Last year, Bryan consigned the entire collection to a Bricks & Minifigs store in Keizer, Oregon, so it could be sold over time. The collection was so impressive that it drew news coverage and huge crowds at the store.

But in November 2024, everything changed. Bricks & Minifigs corporate took over the store during a dispute with the franchise owner. When they seized the store, they also took control of Bryan and his father's collection — even though it did not belong to them. According to Bryan, the company removed the identifying tags from the sets and continued selling the collection instead of returning it, claiming he could not prove ownership. Bryan and his father have tried going through authorities and legal channels, but the cost of forcing action in court could be tens of thousands of dollars, making it extremely difficult for them to fight back.

This fundraiser is to help Bryan and his father recover their collection or the value of it and cover legal costs. If you can help in any way — even just sharing the story — it means a lot to their family. Your support can make a real difference in helping them seek justice and reclaim what's rightfully theirs.
